

From: SEPARC@aol.com@inetgw
To: Microsoft ATR
Date: 1/23/02 5:54pm
Subject: microsoft settlement

Microsoft has monopolized the computer life of American citizens.

Why Gateway, Dell, IBM, Compaq and most computer companies are lured into Microsoft's net, YES, the internet, boggles the mind.

Virtually, no computers are available, without Microsoft's system. The public is held hostage by this company.

If a consumer wants to read a "JAVA" page, they're forced to download a Java enabler. Microsoft is forcing anyone who wants to visit a Java page, to take the time to download a program, which could have been included if Microsoft didn't want to monopolize the browser world. Microsoft made it as difficult as possible to use Netscape too.

Awaiting a decision in Washington as to their punishment, Microsoft has the audacity to make AOL as inconvenient as possible with Microsoft XP, in a sickening attempt to force AOL subscribers to switch to MicrosoftNet.

No matter the size of a monitor's screen, XP will only allow an AOL screen to a maximum 6x4" screen.

Microsoft has dealt low blows to Sunmicrosystems, Linux, Netscape, and now is assaulting AOL.

WHY ARE ALL NEW COMPUTERS LOADED WITH XP ?

How does Microsoft manage to force their product on all computer companies ?

Why does the consumer have no choice but to accept Microsoft products ?

Why isn't Microsoft punished as severely as the punishment they've "enforced" on all competition ?

Sharon Parchinski
separc@aol.com